because of the redistributive nature of institutions and the availability of implementable alternatives with different distributive consequences the desire of federation members to change institutional specifics in their favor is a permanent feature of the federal political process this is so for two reasons first states or their equivalents in democratic federations usually can succeed in renegotiating the rules if they feel sufficiently motivated to do so second in the case of a federation it is more or less clear who stands to benefit from any change in institutions thus the existence of an equilibrium of constitutional legitimacy at the popular and elite levels cannot be taken for granted the authors show that the presence in the political process of agents who are naturally committed to the status quo institutional arrangement can suffice to coordinate voters to act as if they support existing constitutional arrangements in the late 1990s several of the sponsor agencies of the federal facilities council began developing and implementing initiatives and policies related to sustainable development guidance related to life cycle costing and value engineering was recognized as being supportive of sustainable development in particular when used in the conceptual planning and design phases of acquisition where decisions are made that substantially effect the ultimate performance of a building over its life cycle however specific concerns were raised that when federal agencies apply value engineering in the final stages of design or during construction in response to cost overruns design features that support sustainable development may be eliminated the primary objective of this study therefore was to develop a framework to show how federal agencies can use value engineering and life cycle costing to support sustainable development for federal facilities and meet the objectives of executive order 13123
